WILL "GOOD WILL" DO GOOD?

Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath

(In the Land of Cotton — Muskogee, Oklahoma)

There are times when we cannot but agree with those incorrigible skeptics and avowed pessimists that racial rancour and religious prejudice seem to be incurable human ills and that futile are all the strenuous efforts to affect better understanding and good will between the warring factions of humankind. We, too, have experienced crushing disillusionment when one after another one of the great liberals of society have compromised with, and fallen short of, the all-embracing ideal of brotherhood. There have been times when we might have concurred even with the late Louis Marshall, who was so cynical of the Jewish-Christian good will movement as to designate it a cloak for conversion. Thus it can be seen that we are in nowise blindly or blandly the apostle of good will. We recognize its difficulties and are cognizant of its many shortcomings.

But we have absolutely no sympathy with those of our brethren who place no faith whatsoever in such pursuits and who doubt the sincerity of all its spokesmen. Particularly are we opposed to those among us who, fettered and inhibited by their own prejudices, believe that it is the Jew alone who is asked to surrender and that to survive he must fight shy of any such overtures toward cooperation which the Christian profers. Such an attitude indicates a woeful ignorance of the tremendous ferment now at work in Christendom, — a ferment and a rational approach to the entire problem such as none in Israel has yet dared to emulate. As instance of this fact we desire to refer our readers to one of the most magnificent treatises on good will between Jew and Christian which we have ever read. A perusal of this particular article should be sufficient to silence all the pessimists and frenzied fanatics within our ranks at least for the nonce. Granted that the recrudescence of anti-Jewish feeling abroad and at home must chill them to the core, still we must be manful enough to admit that there are rarely sensitive souls in Christendom today who are enlisted in the ranks of those who, together with ourselves, are seeking to rout from this earth every vestige of ill will.

Says Mr. Everett R. Clinchy in the article just referred to — "The Borderlands of Prejudice," printed in The Christian Century Magazine for May 14, 1930, "While it is true that year by year Sunday School material is being improved, and that during this generation Christian publications are becoming increasingly fair minded, nevertheless much remains upon which to cogitate. Some of our generalizations, for one thing, must be shocking to loyal Jews — when, for example, they read in certain sections of our twentieth century lesson books, which are assumed to be building the kingdom of love: 'The first enemy of the church was Judaism'; 'Paul the Dauntless was stoned by the Jews.' There are vivid reports of 'the plots of the Jews;' dramatic stories of how Paul 'saved his life from the Jews.' " "Suppose," asks this earnest liberal, "the Jews and the Catholics wrote a history of 1923-1925 in the ku klux klan towns of America — would we not appreciate their accuracy if they said, 'some Protestants behaved that way.' And then, would not such preciseness more surely generate good will and friendly relations?"

HOW TO WORRY IN JULY

When the mind wearies of business and its anxieties it seeks refuge in the pleasant thoughts induced by the delightful season. Golf — the undulating fields, the clumps of bush, the mats of green, the mathematics of handicaps, the deceits of tallies — its deep joys and exhilarating thrills — captivates the fancy of some. And there is tennis — the rhythmic swing of racket, the precipitate flights of the ball, the virtue of trusting sportsmanship — this is balm to the spirit of others. And there is fishing — the delight of getting fish for nothing; and verandah pinnochle where the excitement incidental to the game is tempered by the pleasure of a vagrant peep at the blue sky, (a gray sky will do as well) — these blessings cheer others. And of course, what about youth with its visions of a sparkling expanse of water, and a gliding canoe under a soft sky, with a bewitching presence to lull and exhilarate, and a package of cigarettes with a good lighter?

Summer is with us. And here come sober looking men and tell us to worry about politics. They remind us that the voting pencils on the 28th of this month are fraught with tremendous powers. The X's which they will inscribe will have the potency of making and wrecking governments and empires, and creating or ruining prosperity and happiness for the millions of our country. We are bidden to worry!

And there come other sober men and remind us that we must further be anxious about the whether and the how of ensuring the election of Jews to Parliament. Golf, tennis, verandah pinnochle — or Jewish members of Parliament — what thoughts to worry about during the beautiful days of July!

"And," adds the cynic, "as if we did not have enough — here comes along A. B. B. and worries us about a Canadian Jewish Congress."

A CONGRESS

Our call for a Canadian Jewish Congress is a seed which we have thrown out. We hope it has struck favorable soil. During the summer let it gestate. When autumn comes it should blossom forth into ripe fruit. It will be much needed then. In the meantime where are the Lyon Cohens, the Kaisermans, the Goldsticks, the Alter Cherniaks, the Hestrins and the other stalwarts who cultivated the first Congress?

The cause of Palestine will need the support of Canadian Jewry. Who or what is Canadian Jewry? What means has it for registering reactions, or for expressing ideas? We have no bodies in Canada similar to those which function in England or to those which operate in the United States. A representative instrumentality has to be brought into being. Why not then get the best and the latest — a Congress.

THE AMERICAN ZIONIST CONVENTION IN PROSPECT

When these words reach our readers' eyes the American Zionist Convention will be a thing of the past, and its decisions a matter of general knowledge. At the time of writing, however, we are without any reports of what has taken place. Our observations may prove entirely out of focus in the light of later developments.

BNAI BRITH DEVELOPS CAMP SITE

Bnai Brith Lodge new site for a boys' permanent summer camp shows development. The property, consisting of farm-house and out-buildings and about 200 acres of land, was secured by promise of sale last summer and clear titles were secured a few weeks ago. Situated on the western end of Lac Long the property extends almost to the border of Lac Brule, and is 5½ miles from C.P.R. Ste. Agathe Station on the main highway to St. Donat. The soil is of a sand and gravel formation, and the site is ideal for a boys' camp. It is well-wooded and also contains about 40 acres of cleared land and has almost half a mile of lake frontage. The proposed location of the Camp buildings is on a high plateau overlooking both lakes and commanding a view of the surrounding country. The projected plans call for a development to take care of future needs, but for the coming season it is hoped to complete the installation of a reservoir and water mains, dining-hall, kitchen, cold pantry and storage rooms.

A good bathing beach was built last fall under the supervision of past-President Dr. Simon Kirsch, and sufficient firewood has been cut and ice stored to meet requirements for this year.

JEWS CANNOT BUY LAND IN IN PALESTINE

A land law practically preventing the acquisition of land in Palestine by Jews until the completion of the Simpson report has been drafted by the British Government, it is being reported in Jerusalem. Sir John Hope Simpson was appointed May 1 to investigate the report on the land and immigration problems of Palestine for the British Colonial Office.

In expectation of the enforcement of this law, the land offered for sale by Arabs has increased rapidly in the last fortnight. Two hundred thousand acres are said now to be offered to Jewish agencies by Arab landowners.

The Jews, however, are unable to buy because of lack of money. Jewish funds have suffered terribly by the recent political blows, which also have deterred any influx of private capital. Real estate prices have dropped as much as 30 per cent in some cases.

If you want to be happy, if you want to live a contented life, if you want to live a life of genuine pleasure, do something for somebody else. When you feel unhappy, disagreeable, and miserable, go to some one else who is miserable and do that person an act of kindness, and you will find that you will be made happy. The miserable persons in this world are the ones whose hearts are narrow and hard; the happy ones are those who have great big hearts. Such persons are always happy.

Fear, above all things else, enfeebles the vigour of man's actions, supplants decision by vacillation, and opens the road to error. When one seeks counsel of one's fears judgment ceases to obtrude advice. Courage, on the other hand, is universally recognised as the manliest of all human attributes; it nerves its possessor for resolute attempts, and equips him for putting forth his supreme efforts.

Hundreds Attend Rubenstein Funeral

A large number of mourners gathered at the funeral of Jacob Rubenstein, held at his home, 3567 St. Urbain street, Thursday, June 26. Mr. Rubenstein who is the second of three brothers who have been removed by death since May 21, was 92 years of age.

Rabbi Bender, Reverend R. Lapenka, and Rabbi Cohen, of New York, a nephew of the deceased, officiated at the ceremony, and reviewed the many achievements and the sterling qualities of Jacob Rubenstein. Ald. Louis Rubenstein, a brother, was the chief mourner.

Among those present were: Ald. Weldon, Ald. Fortin, Ald. Drummond, Sam. Harris, Robert Jacob, A. L. Kaplansky, Charles Friedman, L. Elton, R. J. Hart, P. B. Hart, Chas. Hale, I. A. Rubinsky, I. Kirschberg, George Williams, J. M. Bethune, Thomas Hannah, G. I. Tiner, D. Becker, J. H. Hunter, Harold Neumann, B. Shapiro, L. Green, Isaac Friedman, Ralph Friedman, H. Rosen, W. L. Northy, James Taylor, Paul Earle, M. Gratt, Charles Pascau, A. H. Lassky, Alec Hart, M. Frank, B. Harris, J. Margolick, J. C. S. Bennett, W. P. McVey, M. Silverstein, Captain W. S. Montefiore, H. S. Friedman, M. S. Friedman, P. E. Workman, B. W. Jacobs, W. L. Laurie and J. R. Cox.

After the service, the body was borne to the Spanish and Portuguese Cemetery for interment.

Hundreds of persons paid final tribute to Lazarus Rubenstein at the funeral service held at his home, 3567 St. Urbain street, Friday afternoon, June 27. The service was conducted by Rabbi Charles Bender assisted by Rev. I. De La Penha, and Rev. Dr. S. Cohen, of Brooklyn, a nephew of the deceased.

Lazarus Rubenstein was a person who grew up but never grew old, Rabbi Bender stated in his address. His lively sympathy with the spirit of the younger generation had made him one of the closest friends of all the young people with whom he came in contact; while his kinship with all that was good had made him the warm supporter of all worthy causes in the community, winning for him the respect and affection of both Jew and non-Jew.

Referring to the three swift visits which the "angel of death" had paid to the Rubenstein home in little over a month, Rabbi Bender spoke of the comfort contained in the words of the funeral ritual, "In their life and in their death, they were not separated." Nor should the passing of this third brother at the age of 72 be mourned, he stated, since it had been his express wish not to continue in this life until he was "too old." Thus his death, coming at a time when he was still active, was a direct answer to one of his dearest wishes.

An appreciation of his kindly personality and his merry wit was given by Rev. Dr. Cohen.

The chief mourner was Ald. Louis Rubenstein, a brother; and the pallbearers were the executive of the Y.M.H.A.: M. Levitt, vice-president; H. Tarshis, treasurer, Arthur Levin, D. L. Shalinsky, I. Diner, S. L. Mendelssohn and Harvey Golden executive director.

Interment took place at the Spanish and Portuguese cemetery and, on the way, the cortege paused for a moment before the Y.M.H.A. building in which Lazarus Rubenstein had taken so deep an interest and of which his brother, Louis, is now president. Among the others attending the funeral were: Mrs. John Kerr, of Brantford, a sister of the deceased; Brig.-Gen. W. O. H. Dodds, Captain W. S. Montefiore, Col. R. Artists Give Vivid Recital Showing extraordinary virtuosity in picturing and caricaturing the various types that go to make up the world, David Vardi, former member of the Moscow Art Theatre and producer for the Shuberts of the English version of "The Dybbuk," with Eva Yoalit, gave a recital in the Windsor Hall Tuesday night, June 24th. Other impersonators have been able to suggest two or at the most three, characters at a time. Mr. Vardi, however, paints a swift yet detailed and vivid canvas of the Red Square in Moscow during the heyday of Leon Trotsky's popularity. Everything is there from Trotsky's little goatee to the ringing bells of the Moscow churches ringing out in celebration of the revolution; from the angry chant of the protesting priests to the fo'lish tickles of the drunken mujik. Every type present in that vast throng is his dash of color to the canvas. Even the broken-down Czarist general, hiding in a remote corner is there. Or again, he crowds into two minutes of electric acting, an entire Jewish community, each observing the Sabbath in his own particular manner, including groups of men and boys and representatives of three generations of a family. Different types of readers reciting the Torah in the synagogue is another feat accomplished by the amazing Mr. Vardi. A scant ten minutes sufficed for each of these miniature panoramas and, incidentally, they were acted without the help of a single prop.

Mr. Vardi's most phenomenal characteristic is his ability literally to change his face, so swiftly that he can portray a dozen or more differing types of individuals in as many minutes. This was proved in the sketch he gave of a Jewish mother. He entered the stage a quiet man of short stature, in Tuxedo suit. Allowing himself the luxury of one prop, a shawl, he placed it over his head, gathered it under his chin, as a frame for his face, glanced at the audience and—he had become a voluble Jewess dilating upon the fortunes of her son in America. By sheer personality, he holds his audience in the hollow of his hand and, even if one does not understand Yiddish, so vivid are his gestures and so dynamic his body action that the meaning of his caricatures is driven home again and again.

Like Mr. Vardi, Miss Yoalit understands the compelling value of gesture. Her hands are expressive and beautiful. In two poems recited in Yiddish, "Art thou not hungry for thy children, Zion?" and "The Unsung Song," they were more than merely expressive, they were the accompaniment to the poem, suggesting the rhythm of the lines. Her work is more subdued and less matured than Mr. Vardi's and she is at her best in the lyrical element. Readings from Isaiah, Lamentations and the Song of Solomon were richly endowed with feeling. The voice was modulated to just the correct tone of spirituality and other-worldiness.

Zionist Convention in Prospect

In one respect the situation has already been largely clarified. The leading members of the old regime have announced their withdrawal from office. Mr. Lipsky has identified himself with the Judea Insurance Company and will not be able to act as paid president of the Zionist Organization. Morris Rothenberg, vice president has declared that he will not accept any office. Meyer Weisgal the secretary is now a resident of Toronto and will not be available for re-election. With these mainstays gone the way has been cleared for re-organization.

That the old administration had outlived its usefulness has long been patent. It is true that some of the members were men of intelligence who understood their Zionism and were close to Jewish life. The weakness of the administration as a whole was that it was recruited mainly from one type in New York. Its outlook reflected the views of the one group and was out of harmony with the views that dominate the activities of the mass of the public throughout the country. The leaders lived in an artificial Zionist environment in New York. They could not be in contact with the pulse of Jewish life in the smaller centres. The feeling grew that just as New York city itself is not typical or representative of the quality of American life generally, so the Jewish element of that City does not properly register the spirit of the Jewish hinterland of America. It was a case of a revolt of the Washingtons and the Bostons and the Chatanoogas against the domination of Harlem.

We take it that some sort of re-organization will take place. There is talk of the abolition of the office of president, and the inauguration of government by committee. In ordinary times and under ordinary conditions, such a change would in itself mark an important advance in the reform of American Zionism. Hitherto the issues arising out of the personnel of the administration were treated as major issues, and attempts at changes were regarded as revolutions and were meted out the usual fate of revolutions. What would formerly have been considered as tremendous achievements will this time be accomplished with little effort and without opposition.

Whether the convention will realize it or not, the issue at present is not whether this group or that group shall be entrusted with the administration. The major question now is not one of personnel. There is staring us in the face the problem of the fundamental revaluation of Zionist goods. American Zionism (and the Zionism of other countries for that matter) has to re-constitute its organization in the light of the exigencies of the Palestine situation. World Zionism has reached a crisis. What course shall Zionist leadership take in regard to the new developments? Suppose the MacDonald government persists in its Machiavelian attitude and renders impossible the achievement of the Zionist progress in Palestine? What will the Zionists do? It may be necessary to suspend Zionist activity altogether. It may be necessary to change the leadership, recognizing the failure of the Weizmann policy. These possibilities should be held in view when the program of American Zionism is laid down. Within a month, or two, or three, American Zionism may be called upon to help make decisions that will revolutionize the whole trend of Zionism. A leadership capable of making radical decisions will then be needed. The present convention should therefore realize that it is face to face with responsibilities of unprecedented gravity.

Ordinary makeshift compromises may be a proper solution to the difficulties of selecting an administration. But we submit that having regard to the impendence of a crisis in the general affairs of Zionism a mere comprise administration at the present moment will not do. A strong — the very strongest possible — administration should be placed in charge. Under the conditions we believe that a Brandeis administration would be the best answer to the needs of the occasion. It is the only alternative to a compromise administration. A compromise government is unthinkable. The alternative must therefore be taken. A.B.B.

Herzl Memorial Week

The week of July 13th. to July 20th has been proclaimed by the Zionist Organization in Canada, as Herzl Memorial Week. A mass meeting will be held in the Auditorium of the Young Men's Hebrew Association, July 16th. During the past ten years, the Jewish National Fund, through contributions remitted by World Zionists, has planted over 712,000 trees on 4058 dunams of land in 14 different places in Palestine. It is a possession of an additional 24,250 dunams of land, good only for forests. Keep green the memory of our great leader by planting trees in the Herzl Forests of Palestine has been adopted as the slogan of this memorial week.

Dom. Textile Makes Fine Operating Showing in Difficult Year

IN view of the prevailing conditions that obtained in the industry an excellent showing is indicated in the annual report of Dominion Textile Company for the year ended March 31st, 1930. Revenue from investments and miscellaneous income was more than sufficient to offset a slight reduction in operating profits while earnings on the average number of shares on which dividend were paid are equal to $6.06 a share as against $6.47 in each of the two previous years.

Operating profit for the year was $1,518,321 as compared with $1,652,562 in the preceding year. Other income brought the year's total revenue to $2,079,931, as against $1,976,688 on a like comparison. Deduction of bond interest and premium on bonds redeemed, left a net income for the year of $1,772,226, as against $1,665,448 in 1928-29 and $1,593,512 in 1927-28. Preferred dividend absorbed $135,842, leaving a balance of $1,636,424 applicable to the common. Common dividends absorbed $1,349,804, against $1,180,850 last year, leaving a reduced surplus on the year at $286,620 which with previous balance brought forward $7,211,414 leaves a net profit and loss balance of $7,498,034 to be carried forward.

Total assets are up at $35,701,878 from $35,464,530. Individual items shows property account down over half a million to $19,567,684 investments in and advances to subsidiary companies are up almost $2,000,000 at $4,317,207; raw cotton is valued at $700,000 lower and other inventories are up $300,000.

Among the liabilities loans are over $400,000 higher at $1,649,492, payables declined over $400,000 to $608,994.

Working capital shows a reduction in the current report, standing at $9,244,296 against $10,302,884 in the preceding statement.

CANADA BREAD

It has been learned from semi-official sources that Canada Bread earned its common dividend by a comfortable margin for the year ending June 30 and will not cut the present rate in the immediate future. This has been accomplished in the face of higher flour prices, which although now at substantially lower levels have not benefitted a number of baking concerns whose commitments were made months ahead.

Working capital will be shown down reflecting renovations and extensions effected during the current year but it is understood that provision has been made for these requirements.

WINNIPEG ELECTRIC

The May statement of the Winnipeg Electric Company shows a decline in earnings for that month, as compared with the correspondir period of 1929. Gross earnings for the month were $495,776, which compares with a monthly average of $557,908 for the six months ending June 30, 1929. Net earnings from operation for May were $66,940, which compares with a monthly average of $167,437 for the six months ended June 30, 1929.

McINTYRE-PORCUPINE

In making an estimate of earnings of McIntyre-Porcupine Mines, once the new mill is in operation, consideration must be given to reduction in costs due to the new flotation process, which has been developed by the company. Furthermore, McIntyre's huge mine development campaign may be said to have been completed and charges for development can be cut down materially.

McIntyre's operating costs in the past year were $4.41 per ton. Let 50 cents per ton be deducted for savings from the new process and 41 cents per ton allowed for extraordinary mine developments costs of the past, that will be saved in future. The operating costs per ton would then be $3.50.

TECK-HUGHES MINES

While Teck-Hughes has announced the construction of only one new 350-ton mill unit, the foundations now being excavated are said to be large enough for two. Some time ago it was reported that two units were proposed to follow each other in quick succession. Officials have said that from present indications an increase to the mill of 350 tons would not mark the limit of the mine's expansion.

SHERRITT-GORDON

While Sherritt-Gordon Mines management expected that work from the new main shaft would show copper ore averaging about 3% copper a check up on 27,000 tons handled in the test mill shows the grade to be nearer 5%. Sampling of car samples from development faces is now reported to show an average of 5.15% copper, 3.10% zinc, 80 cents in gold and 48 cents in silver per ton.

BIG MISSOURI

It is reported from the west that operations on the Big Missouri are progressing favorably. The work consists of diamond drilling and some drifting. The drills are being worked in three shifts and it is understood it is being continued to systematic exploration of the large silicified porphyry

ABANA MINES

With development work at Abana Mines brought to a point where the mine is now at a production stage from the 550-foot level, a complete report has been prepared of operations carried out in the past six months. The report, it is understood shows a marked increase in the proven and indicated ore reserves, which are now estimated to be approximately $22,500,000. This compares with the last official estimate of $11,000,000.

VIPOND CONSOLIDATED

Reports of operating results at Vipond Consolidated Mines have been consistently favorable for some time and it is understood from reliable sources that production for the quarter ending this month will establish a new record for the company, totalling appreciably above output for any previous quarter in the mine's history. This increase is not due to any step-up in the tonnage treated at the mill, but to a better average grade of ore handled during the period.

GRANADA ROUYN

Granada Rouyn is reported to have centred all its machines on stoping ore on the 625-foot level, in preparation of the commencement of production. The mill should turn over with in the next couple of weeks.

CALMONT OILS

The flow at the Calmont No. 2 well, it is reported, is being maintained at practically full strength, with partial recovery from about 1,000 pounds back pressure, which will gradually be reduced to permit maximum recovery without freezing.

MAYLAND OILS

Mayland No. 2 well was reported over the week-end as in the poker chip shales. This formation is immediately above the lime, or main producing horizon. The well should be completed shortly.

"Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without rancor,
That for what it cost me to be free,
I might have had an anchor."

Not long ago the following news item was received by the Review: "A conference took place at the Jewish Old Folks' Home of Toronto at which representatives from 32 synagogues, ladies' auxiliaries and societies were present. The president, S. Harris, appealed to the members present to help build a new, modern institution as the present one is a fire-trap."

Acting on this suggestion the Review sent an investigator to the Jewish Old Folks' Home. Following is a verbatim report with a few minor deletions:

"The Jewish Old Folks' Home at 31 Cecil Street has three floors. The stairway leading from the third floor to the second is narrow, not more than 18 inches wide with a curve at the bottom. Two people cannot walk down side by side. The front staircase on the second floor is only as wide as the stairway in the average middle class man's home. There is also a back stairway, a winding one similar to the one leading from the third floor to the second. The halls are narrow. When three people are standing at the head of the stairs it is crowded.

"The bathrooms, although tiled, are of the old-fashioned type without the breather and so do not allow for proper ventilation. The bedrooms contain too many beds for their size. One room in particular on the third floor has four beds and is only as large as a back or middle bedroom in a private home. There is also on the second floor a balcony, badly in need of paint, on which there are a number of dilapidated chairs for the most part splintery wicker ones. The balcony overlooks a grassed, shady yard. This yard might be a very pleasant place in summer if there were a few garden swings and hammocks in lieu of the hard board backless benches which are there at present. As the old people do not go away for the summer it is assumed that most of their time is spent here during the hot months. Downstairs there are more bed-rooms, overcrowded too; a dining room containing only long tables covered with not too clean clothes, and a kitchen. In the whole house there is not one pleasantly furnished room, such as a parlour or living room where the healthier old people, able to move around, could spend their time in pleasanter surroundings than bed-rooms.

"The floors are of unpolished hard-wood, totally without any such thing as a bit of bright rug and the walls are as bare of anything ornamental. The whole interior is most depressing. It is the sort of place where one prays that one's own old age and the old age of those near and dear will not be spent. There are about 32 inmates in the Home, many of them incurables, one or two so ill that they should have a nurse in constant attendance. There is only one nurse for them all and she comes in only for the night from 9 until 9 in the morning.

"The bed-clothes are soiled. In one bed a piece of bread and butter was hidden under the pillow—in other beds similar untidiness. There should be at least one more attendant constantly looking after the beds. Some of the inmates are melancholy and extremely sick and the more normal ones were in the same room with them. That the place is a fire-trap is obvious to even the most undiscerning eye. Should a fire break out in that three storied house with old, sick, enfeebled people on the third floor, with those narrow hallways and crooked stairs, nothing but a miracle could save them."

Evidently it has been common knowledge among some people that ever since the Jewish old folks have been housed at 31 Cecil Street, Toronto, they were living in a fire-trap provided for their comfort by the general Jewish community with its various agencies of charity and beneficence. If the Jewish Old Folks' Home was a fire-trap in May when the report of the meeting of representatives of 32 synagogues, ladies' auxiliaries and societies took place, it was a fire-trap long before that and is at this moment. Leave out the fact that the Jewish old people are not living in the brightest surroundings. If, by the admission of authorities of the Home the place is a fire-trap, then if fire broke out this evening or tomorrow morning it is quite likely that a number of the people living there would be burned to death. Such events have occurred in other communities to be black marks against them forever. Perhaps where some institutions were fire-traps it was not generally known that this was true. But in the case of the Jewish Old Folks' Home it is henceforth published to the people that its authorities consider the building an unsafe place to keep people handicapped by the disabilities of sickness and old age.

The Jewish Old Folks' Home has honorary and active presidents and vice-presidents, trustees and an advisory board. This column could give you their names but why let them bear the brunt of the stigma that attaches to a whole community which has money for everything except the adequate care of its poor and old? For years those actively interested in the Jewish Old Folks' Home have begged for more attention for the Home from the Jewish community. Appended to the list of officers obtained is the following note: "They are going to build a new house and if they are able to get enough money it will be finished in a year."

This might be re-written to read: "If they are able to keep enough money in Toronto." While this column does not hold that charity ends at home it does maintain that it begins there at least when the need is imperative. The well-meaning and the good-hearted who fling themselves so vigorously into assistance for institutions at a romantic distance should make a more sensible division of their efforts on behalf of needy institutions situated at home. Many things can happen in a year. It is to be hoped that the Jewish community of Toronto will be spared the worst of them. But in case of loss of life at the Jewish Old Folks' Home the blame can be fixed right now on the community.

From Our Contemporaries

The Sentinel, Chicago, says:

"The thirty-third annual Zionist convention which will commence next Sunday in Cleveland, will be called upon to take action on several significant matters. First of all, American Zionists will have to decide on the stand which they are to take with reference to the British relationship to Jewish work in Palestine. If not for the support and interest of American Jews it is questionable whether the Balfour Declaration would ever have been published and consequently whether Great Britain would have received the mandate for Palestine. Recently the entire Zionist project has received rough treatment at the hands of the Labor Government. That Great Britain has been unfair and dishonest with Jewish endeavor in Palestine, is realized and admitted not only by world Jewry but also by far-sighted English political leaders. The American Zionists will therefore have to resolve in Cleveland just how to influence Great Britain to change her present tactics which spell danger for the establishment of the Jewish homeland in Palestine.

And yet, in spite of the tremendous importance of the political phase of Zionism, it seems that our local problems will overshadow everything else in Cleveland. Things have not been right in American Zionism for a number of years, but the organization has reached its most critical period particularly since the last convention a year ago. The organization has dwindled down to a fraction of its original strength: the projects undertaken by the New York office have been a failure; and although expenses have been very considerably reduced, the national executive has found it most difficult to meet its meager budget. In spite of the fact that with the creation of the Jewish Agency the general interest in Zionism has increased in this country, the organization has accomplished this year less than in previous years. There is no doubt that the general economic depression has a good bit to do with this state of affairs, but people who are close to internal Zionist matters insist that this perilous situation is a result of the fact that American Zionists have lost faith in the present leadership.

Loyal Zionists still remember the days of ten and twelve years ago when, under the leadership of Brandeis, Mack, and their associates, Zionism exercised a tremendous influence in American Jewry. It is therefore natural that these Zionists should turn to the Brandeis-Mack group for assistance in this critical emergency. In fact, the national Zionist executive appointed a committee to invite the Brandeis-Mack group to return to active participation in the movement. The latter prepared a lengthy document in

A. H. Heller of Sarnia, Ont., writes to the Jewish Old Folks' Home as follows:

Please find enclosed cheque for $55.25 collected from the "Pushkas" by Rev. D. Granatstein.

We noticed in the Toronto papers that you are going to build a new institution, and we want to wish you luck in your new enterprise.

Mr. Heller would suggest to the members of this institution that they appoint a man and woman to visit all the towns and leave "Pushkas" in every house. They should endeavor to interest a few in each town to attend to it as we do here in Sarnia. This would bring in a good sum of money during the year."

Editor,
Canadian Jewish Review.

I am reading the Review with both pleasure and benefit. In particular, the situation in Palestine seems to be deplorable and I shall follow it with keen interest and in the hope that justice will soon prevail. The recovery of Palestine to the Jewish race was, perhaps, the greatest thrill of the war, and it seems incredible that anything should occur at this late period to set aside this supereminent accomplishment.

Yours very sincerely,
Emily F. Murphy,
Police Magistrate, Edmonton, Alberta.

which they stated the conditions under which they would care to come back. This statement has been branded by followers of the administration as an ultimatum. Naturally enough, some of the present leaders are hard losers and they are unwilling to admit that they have made Zionism a failure in this country. It seems to us, however, that this is a dangerous time for playing politics of any sort. Whether the Brandeis-Mack demands are harsh or not is beside the point. The fact is that the movement is in a critical state and only a united front can save Zionism in this country. All factions must come together and work out a new modus vivendi for American Zionism. Hence, whatever one's opinion may be on any of the phases of American Zionism, it is perfectly evident that a change in administration is an immediate necessity. We hope that the delegates to the Cleveland convention will not be pervaded by any partisan bias and that they will take such action which will give us a revitalized American Zionism. Let the American Zionists remember that upon their shoulders rests the responsibility not only for the progress of the movement in this country but also for the success of the entire experiment in Palestine."

MOTION PICTURE USED TO UPHOLD JEWS

Members of the League of Nations' Wailing Wall commission were treated to a bit of motion picture entertainment yesterday which may have important bearing on the findings of the investigators in their inquiry into the controversy among the Jews and Arabs in Palestine.

The Jews produced their motion picture and asked permission to run it off for the commissioners. The latter, somewhat surprised, permitted the show to proceed.

The picture, the Jews said, was taken before the Great War. It depicted American and other tourists at the Wailing Wall, in old style dress. But the important section of the film was that showing benches along the Wailing Wall. The Jews pointed to these benches, and said they had in this photographic bit of evidence enough proof to controvert the assertion of the Arabs that the introduction of benches by Jews at the wall was a recent innovation.

The Arabs, who own the land on which the wall is located, contended the Jews made changes recently, such as putting up benches along the old historic strip of masonry, and that they therefore could not permit them to go to the wall any more —it has high religious significance to the Arabs as well as the Jews, and the Arabs insisted no changes be made.

This was among the most important points in the Arab-Jewish animosities growing out of their dual religious interest in the Wailing Wall. The Arabs said the Jews made changes, put up benches and so on, and that they therefore must be barred.

The Jews refused to be barred, and a year ago fights occurred with many casualties on each side.

The motion picture thus was expected to have important bearing on the legal side of the argument, proving, the Jews contended, the benches were no recent improvement.

Coalition Brings Peace to Zionists as Brandies Group Triumphs

At Cleveland, Ohio, July 1, the nine-year breach in the American Zionist movement was healed by the formation of a coalition government by the thirty-third annual convention of the Zionist Organization of America.

Leadership of the movement, according to the action taken at this afternoon's turbulent session, will be vested in an administrative committee of eighteen members, twelve being adherents of the forces led by Supreme Court Justice Louis D. Brandeis and Federal Judge Julian Mack and six being supporters of Louis Lipsky, president of the Zionist organization.

In addition the delegates elected an executive committee of forty, equally divided between the two factions. A national advisory committee of 150 members was also called into being, 100 elected by the convention and fifty chosen by the Brandeis-Mack group.

Election of the administration committee was the culmination of three days of continuous negotiation between the Brandeis-Mack group in New York and Chatham, Mass., the summer home of Mr. Brandeis, and the Lipsky administration in this city. In the course of the conferences the original Brandeis-Mack memorandum of May 22, which provided for a committee of nine neutrals to take over the affairs of the organization was put aside and Justice Brandeis agreed to work with any administration that was elected by the delegates.

The delegates who, for three days, had been impatiently awaiting the outcome of the conferences, were deeply moved when the terms of peace that were prepared to insure a united front in the American Zionist movement were read by Rabbi James Heller, of Cincinnati, who announced that the peace terms were adopted without discussion and with only three or four negative votes of the nearly 500 delegates present.

Henry Friedberg, on behalf of the nominations committee, then read the names of the eighteen members of the new administrative committee.

Jacob Fishman, of New York and Abraham Spicehandler, of Brooklyn, raised an immediate objection to the inclusion of the names of Rabbi Stephen S. Wise and Abraham Tulin of New York, among the twelve Brandeis-Mark delegates. Some booed the names of the two men.

The convention was thrown into an uproar when Mr. Fishman urged that there should have been "decent regard for the feelings of some of us, as we have had to swallow some bitter pills."

His objection was made because of the statement issued last Saturday by Dr. Wise in New York in which the Lipsky administration was characterized as being "morally and politically bankrupt."

Scarcely able to make his voice heard above the shouts of the delegates who demanded that he sit down, while several echoed his sentiments, Mr. Fishman demanded that the names be voted upon seriatum. Mr. Lipsky pounded the gavel again and again to quiet the din and strongly urged the delegates to sink their own personal feelings for the sake of the unity of the movement.

Over the objection of Mr. Fishman and the several who stood with him, the delegates instructed the secretary to cast one vote for the entire slate of eighteen on the administrative committee.

The vote was followed by an outburst of applause upon which Mr. Lipsky invited the representative of the Brandeis-Mack group in this city to the platform.

There was an enthusiastic demonstration as Jacob De Haas, a veteran of the movement, Robert Szold and Israel Brodie stepped upon the dais.

Each shook hands in turn with Mr. Lipsky, whose administration they have strongly opposed for nine years and as a symbol of the unity of the American Zionists the audience sang "Hatikvah."

Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver, of Cleveland, in a brief thanksgiving address, declared that from now on there would no longer be two parties in American Zionism and the phrase "Brandeis-Mack group" would disappear from the language of Zionists.

He said the hour was historic, for the moment was one which had been prayerfully awaited for nine years and the rift made in this city at that time had been almost miraculously cured in the same place.

He assured the delegates that the slate would be wiped clean of all personal animosities for the sake of the movement and that the organization would go before American Jewry as a united group.

There was more applause and Rabbi Silver said that the critical hour of the movement demanded a wiping out of the $185,000 deficit. In a short time he obtained pledges of $78,000, which, with the $25,000 pledged Sunday night, leaves $82,000 still to be raised.

The peace terms provide that the Brandeis-Mack group have representation as Zionists on the Jewish Agency.

It was indicated that the resignation of Judge William M. Lewis of Philadelphia would make room for Judge Julian Mack on the agency.

The twelve members of the administration committee chosen by the Brandeis-Mack group were Israel Brodie of Baltimore, Jacob De Haas of New York, Mrs. Edward Jacobs of New York, Judge Julian W. Mack of New York, Emanuel Neumann of New York, Rabbi Louis I. Newmann of San Francisco, Dr. Nathan Ratnoff of New York, Samuel J. Rosensohn of New York, Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver of Cleveland, Robert Szold of New York, Abraham Tulin of New York and Dr. Stephen S. Wise of New York.

The six Lipskrites are: Abraham Goldberg of New York, Rabbi James G. Heller of Cincinnati, Judge William M. Lewis of Philadelphia, Louis Lipsky of New York, Morris Rothenberg of New York and Nelson Guttenberg of New York.

One of the important resolutions adopted today called upon Great Britain to rescind its order forbidding entrance into Palestine of Vladimir Jabotinsky, leader of the Zionist revisionist group and founder and leader of the Jewish battalion which fought under General Allenby in Palestine. The exclusion of Jabotinsky was characterized as nullification of the spirit of the Balfour declaration.

The convention sent President Hoover the following message:

Hon. Herbert Hoover,
President of the United States,
Washington.

We, the delegates of the thirty-third annual convention of the Zionist Organization of America, wish to express to you, on behalf of the Zionists of America, our deep appreciation and gratitude for the inspiriting words which you sent to us in your message to the opening of our convention.

Your interest in the rebuilding of Palestine as the Jewish national home has been a source of encouragement for many years. It has been expressed to us on many occasions when your words have given Zionists courage and hope. But your message at this critical period attains in our eyes an enduring significance.

It indicates to the Jews of the United States, as well as of the entire world, that the Government of the United States is keeping a watchful eye on the progress of the ideal of rebuilding the Jewish national home, which it approved in a unanimous joint resolution of Congress in 1922.

It tells us that the hopes of 4,000,000 American Jews have the sympathy of our fellow-citizens.

Your expression of hope that "the discouragements of the moment will presently be removed" gives us assurance that you are deeply concerned with the grave problems which confront the ideal of Zionism today.

We extend to you our best wishes and thank you for your message, which brings to us reassurance and inspiration.

Bernard G. Richards, executive director of the American Jewish Congress of which Rabbi Wise is honorary president, conveyed the greetings of his organization to the convention and indicated he was not in agreement with the statement given out last Saturday night by Dr. Wise.

Mr. Richards declared that, "contrary to the opinion of individuals, whether distinguished or not, the parlance of commerce, the phrases of the counting room, do not belong to the language of the heart and soul."

He asserted that there was no "deficit" in the spirit of the Jewish people and expressed the belief that "while there was a great reservoir of enthusiasm and loyalty in the Zionist movement nobody had any right to abandon confidence or to give up to despair."

The new executive committee is as follows:

Isaac Allen, Baltimore; I. A. Abrahams, Cincinnati; Rabbi Barnett R. Brickner, Cleveland; Charles A. Coen, New York; Mrs. Judith Epstein, New York; Benjamin Evarts, Holyoke, Mass.; Jacob Fishman, New York; Edward Friedman, Far Rockaway, L. Fisher, Chicago; David Freiberger, New York; Israel Goldberg, Brooklyn; Isador Goldberg; Rabbi Solomon Goldman, Chicago; Abraham Goldstein, Hartford, Conn.; Meyer Jacobstein, Rochester, N.Y.; Dr. Mordecai Kaplan, New York; Laurence Levine, New York; Israel Matz, Brooklyn; Dr. S. Fraternal Softball

Bnai Brith softball team will be minus Harold Donn, who broke his ankle in the recent game between Bnai Brith and I.O.F. The accident happened when Manilla was running out the last play of the game, in an effort to beat the throw from Chaplin to Donn, who was playing first base, as the winning run was on third base waiting to score. Friday night the game between Pride of Israel and I.O.F. was finished in a 1-1 tie, Umpire Sammy Gold calling the game in the ninth on account of darkness. Pride of Israel with the addition of "Goody" Rosen erstwhile member of the champion Judeans, Fisher of the Bellwoods Loop at first base, and "Lefty" Ginsberg on the mound looked a hundred per-cent improved. Lister got the only bingle allowed by Ginsberg scoring the run for I.O.F. in the initial frame, on erratic play by the Pride's infield. Not another hit was given for the rest of the game, and the starry southpaw used a change of pace to such advantage that ten fell victims via strike-outs, while only two got to first through free passes. A triple by Charrendoff for one of the three hits allowed by Manilla was responsible for the tying run. Tobe played stellar ball snaring several bids for runs, in centre field. Bnai Brith made a fighting finish against the leading Judeans, losing out 5 to 3, when they put over their three runs in the last frame, while the tying runs were on base when the game ended. Bnai Brith Boys Camp annual benefit game between the Buffalo Weintraubs, and the Local Bnai Brith All-stars, piloted by Dave Bronstein, will benefit the Camp, the officials all working gratis. A picked team will represent Toronto. 7.15 is the starting time. Pride of Israel meets Judeans Tuesday and I.O.F. nine play Knights of Pythias in the early game. The postponed affair between the two first named teams will be played off in the early game on Friday night, while in the late half, Bnai Brith meet the Pythians.

BELLWOODS LEAGUE

Owing to rain, the scheduled exhibition between the Hamilton Beth Jacob Doves, and the all-star team from the league had to be called off, the visitors being notified in time. It is hoped to have this game played later in the month. Wednesday night, at the Trinity Park Diamond, Tuscan Knights play Lyons, in a postponed game, the twin bill taking place the following night at Bellwoods. A.Z.A. meet Tuscans with second place at stake in the early fixture. Rolex play Lynns in the other half. "Slim" Caplan of Rolex has been starring in recent games.

"We have a summer service"

The average summer cottage is not provided with the best of equipment for family washings. Realising this, we have a special summer service of call and delivery to most of the reasonably close-in resorts. Phone today and arrange with our young lady to provide you with this great comfort — and then cross "family wash" off your list of summer cottage worries. We have five different services from which to choose, all done in soft water and at very moderate prices. We would appreciate your phoning early, so as to enable us to make up our drivers' routes.

The Street of Chains

By Lilian Lauferty

By Arrangement with Harper and Brothers.

No man aroused Henrietta from her dream of defeated love, no diversion made her smile and try to forget Michael until Cherubini came to Adam's hôtel and she heard the master of the pianoforte play his own compositions. At once the girl ran to her room to fetch the violin she had inherited from her father and on which she strummed rather poorly. Cherubini said that when she played the fiddle well enough he would write her a song for it, a song of gleaming things: ivory like her skin, gold like her eyes, copper like her hair. Henrietta clapped her hands and said she would work so hard that the master would have to write her a song in short order. She determined to play superbly and to win fame so great that her uncle would come to her and beg her to honor his son Michael with her gifted hand.

Adam was delighted at the thought of giving his young cousin an interest outside her own centripetal unhappiness. So he was glad when Cherubini promised to engage a teacher for Henrietta, but this did not prevent his beating the price down the last possible sou when Cherubini sent a young Frenchman named Gervaise de la Vannes to apply for the position of violin instructor to Miss Gruenturm.

De la Vannes was a slight, blue-eyed lad who came from the petty nobility of the south of France. His brothers, great giants of men, were in Napoleon's Guard of Honor, but Gervaise, too frail for such service, had come to Paris to make a fortune with his violin bow. So far his only triumph was the interest of Cherubini, who said that if ever he were head of the Conservatoire (an ambition he realized some ten years later) he would give young Gervaise the department of strings, a promise of which the boy was one day vainly to remind him.

Daily, Gervaise de la Vannes crossed the Seine and walked past the suber and dignified façades of the rue de Rivoli to the crowded side street where the Hôtel Gruenturm stood. He was paid, though poorly, to teach Henrietta the violin. He fell, and richly, in love with her. When he found that he could not inspire her to speak any language save that of music, he devoted himself the more ardently to the one gift she would have of him.

Adam was delighted because his cousin's eyes sparkled with energy instead of with tears. He began to feel that it was his duty to look around for a suitable husband for her, but when one of the Darmstadters proposed for her hand, Adam put him off with a solemn: "The girl but finds herself now; let her have her youth before we make a housewife of her." But he devoted himself so earnestly to making wise investments with the few paltry pounds Henrietta had inherited from her mother that there were soon several thousands of francs credited to her, and the poor orphan cousin began to be known as an heiress.

In 1812, Michael, youngest son of old Moses David, dutifully agreed to marry Babette Prager of Koln. He wrote his cousin Henrietta in Paris; she wept for an hour after receiving his letter, then she set her lips and took up her violin bow. At the moment it seemed more than ever imperative to become a great musician whom all the world would delight to honor and for whom Michael David Gruenturm would sigh in vain.

When Michael was married, the family council determined that it

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water-power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming, and forest life is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

For free copies write: G. A. ELLIOTT, Director of Colonization, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, Ontario.

would be unwise to permit Henriette to attend the wedding. She was beautiful and fair, Babette Prager had swarthy coloring and a stolid face; Michael was young and it was best to discount chance before it arose.

Adam, going to Koln for the festivities, lingered in Germany to include business affairs in the trip which had been a matter of some expense. At the end of a month and when Adam was preparing to return to Paris and his ward, sudden knowledge came to old Moses David that his life work was completed. He summoned his sons, and Adam dutifully took his place at his father's side.

A month of loneliness, the greater since her guardian cousin was not a good correspondent, drove Henrietta to a step she might not even then have taken if mastery of the violin had not proved as difficult as control of her feelings. While the three sons of the house of Gruenturm lingered at their father's bedside, word came that Henrietta had run away with the Sieur de la Vannes and was even now his wife. Old Moses David closed his eyes and two tears coursed down his cheeks. His lips twitched in rage and flecks of foam appeared at the corners of his mouth. His sons thought he might be preparing to curse their cousin. But he said quietly and with brooding solemnity:

"She belongs to us. Some day she will return to her own people."

Then he swore Adam and Enoch and young Michael the bridegroom to fidelity, to unity, to loyalty to their own race, to concord in all their actions and to undying devotion to the Eternal One, the God of Israel. He laid his cold hands above their warm ones. He blessed their intertwining fingers, their sons and their sons' sons, their house forevermore. His weeping Theresa came to his side. The Reb arrived. Moses David Gruenturm said his "Hear, O Israel" and went to his fathers. At dusk, his sons went out into the Judengasse to collect seven other men for the Minion, the evening prayer which only men might say for the safety of a soul just winged in flight.

The gates at the end of the street stood wide; the Judengasse lay free and fearless as night came down. Its bars were gone. Napoleon had opened the Ghetto. It was no longer a street of chains.

CHAPTER V

For years Carlie had wished to ask Grandpa a question. Wished and feared. Wondered and kept silent. But on the April day when Henrietta came with the younger children to listen to Grandpa's recital of the Gruenturm Saga, the question suddenly asked itself.

"After the night when Moses David died and his sons found the chains gone from the Judengasse, were there ever any chained streets again, Grandpa?" the question went.

"Ah, ah!" the old man said. "The child speaks wisdom. Listen to the rest of our history and you will find the answer. They put the chains back upon the street, Charlotte, after Napoleon was defeated on Flemish soil. But the chains did not remain long, for the Jews of the city offered forty thousand pounds to the City Fathers for the removal of the gates that made their street a prison. And the City Fathers accepted. Some say that the idea was the Gruenturm contribution and that the other Jews of the street had to find the money; some say the Gruenturms loaned it to the Judengasse; and there are those who believe that they gave it all to free their people from bondage."

"Probably they loaned it at usury," Henriette laughed.

"But there aren't any more chains anyway," Tress exulted.

Granpa looked at her for a long moment. "You think not? You think you are free of your memories, my Theresa? You think you are not chained to your past, to your traditions, to your heritage?"

His voice was terrible. Tress reached out for Carlie's hand. Thus fortified she protested: "But you are only half Gruenturm, Granpa. And nobody has to be Jewish if they don't like it. Or live at Rudnick's. Especially when their name is Delavan. There is not any Street of Chains any more unless you make it yourself."

Granpa lifted his ivory cane and shook it. Then he turned to Tress and smiled at her with grave sweetness. And he spoke gently, as he always spoke to her.

"You are the image of my sainted mother, Theresa. You cannot look so much like her and not be at all like her. Listen, my child, to the rest of her story. And then decide for yourself if you wish to be held by a glorious tradition or if you could endure to wear the chains of cowardice and disloyalty. For myself, I am proud. I am a descendant of the greatest family in the world. I am a Gruenturm. The Gruenturm honor is mine to uphold."

Then he went on with the story of his house. And the next chapter was indeed an honorable one. For it told of the Margrave's return from banishment at the time when Napoleon went into banishment, and of the fact that the sons of Moses David came to the Margrave at once with an accounting of their stewardship of the fortune he had entrusted to their father. There was no scrap of paper, no sign of a document to prove that the wealth that had gone from the Gruenturm cellar to double and triple and double again had ever belonged to the Margrave. But the sons of Moses David returned his wealth increased and multiplied twenty times. The grateful noble published the tale of their honesty and financial genius; this opened the doors of the European courts to them; and, in turn, it opened their purses to the monarchs of the Continent.

As the Gruenturms waxed richer and more powerful their desire for unity increased. They determined to find Henrietta and bring her back into the fold. In the winter of 1820 she was discovered in a tiny flat on the wrong bank of the Seine. There were three sickly children to add to the confusion of the shabby studio home where Gervaise gave violin lessons all day long and could not bear it when Henrietta wanted to practice her fiddle at night. So the music which had brought them together was no longer a bond; and indeed there was no visible bond to hold the beautiful Henrietta to her drab and dispirited young husband. But she refused to leave him; and the Gruenturms would not accept him, since the orthodoxy of the Jew could not acknowledge that other orthodoxy which had produced the Sieur de la Vannes.

The next chapter in the Gruenturm Saga was a strange one; driven by the conviction that their father would never rest easy in his grave until the errant daughter of Israel return to the house of her fathers, the sons of Moses David began a persecution in the name of love. Bribery, arguments, cajolery, pleas, and threats failed to move Henrietta or to buy Gervaise. "Fidelity, unity, loyalty and concord" were now the Gruenturm motto; but the things to which they must be faithful and true did not include an anemic young fiddler of an alien race; nor did it seem possible that Henrietta would cling to her broken reed when its utter weakness was revealed to her.

The Gruenturms hounded Gervaise out of Paris, out of France, out of any spot where he struggled for a foothold and found himself blocked implacably and always by a wall of obstacles.

Gervaise could not find a patron nor a friend anywhere, for no one wanted to fight a Gruenturm edict. Cherubini was not the only one to refuse de la Vannes a position, nor the only one to forget a promise. Seven children were born to Gervaise and Henrietta during the years between 1813 and 1825. All died. De la Vannes lost courage, lost spirit, lost hope, and lost, perhaps, even his dream of love. He begged Henrietta to make terms with her family; possibly he expected those terms would be the very ones he had rejected years before: her return to her own people, the consequent lifting of the ban on him and his activities. Henrietta went to Paris and saw Adam. She returned in a fortnight wearing a fine cashmere dress collared in point d'Alençon and fastened at the throat with an engraved gold brooch that had belonged to Adam's mother, Madam Theresa. The brooch was edged with three rows of tiny coral beads strung on fine gold wires which encircled its generous oval. In a brass-hooped chest Henrietta brought the jewels, letters, and keepsakes she had accumulated during her youth in rich Gruenturm houses. She said her cousin Adam had been very generous about letting her have all her trinkets. He had also given her two passages to America.

A child was born to Henrietta during the six weeks' voyage to the new country. Gervaise never saw his son. De la Vannes died at sea. Of bronchitis, the Saga had it.

When Henrietta reached America she slipped in as Mrs. Delavan. She hid behind the name; she was inflamed by a passionate determination to keep her son from the Gruenturms, to bring him up according to her own lights, to make her own way and the boy's and so to make him completely and utterly hers. In keeping her man-child from the Gruenturms she had a sense of defeating the brothers, of depriving them of a rare gift they had forfeited by thwarting her dreams of love and fame and happiness. She cooked and sewed and baked and gave violin lessons to beginners in order to support her son. She brought him up a fiercely orthodox Jew, placed him in old man Hamburger's crockery business down on Houston Street, saw him safely married to Charlotte Hamburger, beheld a sign swinging over the crockery store with a proud new inscription: "Hamburger and Delavan," and then folded her hands and went to her reward. . . .

"That is the Gruenturm Saga." Granpa sighed. "That is the true tale of your heritage, children. My mother selig was a great woman. She never deserted the faith of her fathers. She was always true to the memory of her husband. Theresa has her lovely face; Charlotte has her noble spirit. God keep you always united to carry on her glory——"

Rabbi Eisendrath's Editorial

Plunging frankly into that storm center of religious antipathies, he admits: "We do not generalize in all matters as we do about the crucifixion story. It is pertinent to note that in writing up the Inquisition a Christian asserts that Christians burned the heretics, but rather he says, 'At Soisson, the mob . . . At Liege, the faithful . . . burned the heretics.' " "Just so," adds this honest Christian, "The mob, and certain mistaken faithful have poisoned Socrates, crucified Mani, burned John Huss, and so on into the twentieth century harried and persecuted many whose only fault was faithfulness to the truth as they saw it. Well, just so, the mob, the mistaken faithful, killed Jesus, and we need not doubt that there were many Jews whose hearts were torn and sensibilities were shocked when Jesus was nailed to the cross by some Romans to the satisfaction of some Jews. Certainly then, we must avoid all possibilities of blaming contemporary Jews for the killing of Jesus nineteen hundred years ago."

Following in the wake of George Foote Moore and Travers Herford, (both of whom owe much of their theories to Professor Lauterbach of the Hebrew Union College) Clinchy scores the New Testament account of the Pharisees as "unfair to the point of caricature." And how radically different from most Christian writers who, patronizingly admitting the heritage of Judaism in the past believe none the less that it has been superseded by Christianity are the words of this uncompromising thinker. The constant reference to Christianity as a 'new cloth' in contrast to the 'worn out garment of Judaism' not only "creates an image of Judaism as a dead religion (a notion which has serious implications for community relations) but also is historically and anthropologically unsound. Judaism produced Hillel fifty years before Judaism produced Jesus. Jesus, the intense and profound Jew, was not the product of a 'worn out' religion; Maimonides, eleven centuries later, and the deep and mystic Bahye further indicate that Judaism was very much alive. Then, too, one thinks of Jews in modern times whose thinking, moral vision, and religious insight are sharp denials that Judaism has 'lost the power of growth.' "

And ironically does he attack those satanic forces that would quote Scripture to justify their missionary zeal. He quotes from several Sunday School pamphlets: " 'John,' we read, 'had preached repentance to the Jews. The Jews refused to listen.' This is not the situation," writes Clinchy. "John did have followers, and they were Jews. And these Jews should not be severed from their people and pictured as heroes in God's drama, and the Jews as villians." Again, we are told the rabbis (who were teachers of Jesus) were worthy of nothing but 'scathing, stinging words from Jesus.' 'His words of withering scorn still apply to those who will take no part in His kingdom' quotes Clinchy from these Christian tracts, and satirically he adds: "Modern Jews, it would appear, are included in this chastisement."

With his tongue in his cheek, he reproduces from a similar pamphlet the claim that the early Christians were 'mild tempered, patient, forgiving' and significantly adds that "one is skating on thin ice indeed, when one generalizes about the perfect love of Christianity in one's own age. Pogroms in Europe are twentieth century facts. Even American Christian churches take love rather lightly in those areas of accustomed discrimination. Intelligent Jews, knowing our treatment of the Negro, our denominational lines of baptism and discrimination at the Lord's Supper, must be perplexed by such an assertion as this which appears likewise in Christian religious school literature: 'Two persons may be different in culture, ability, standing, so that they have little in common; but if they are Christians, they have a deep affection for each other. The cross creates bonds that cannot be broken.' "

Such are the frank admissions, caustic criticisms, scathing indictments which Clinchy makes in this profoundly valuable article, as he pleads not for any mere tolerance, but for true understanding and fellowship, for the Jew to be given the opportunity to be "proud of his Jewishness," to be no longer chided or laughed into a feeling of inferiority," to make "Christians respect Judaism" and "be no longer dead to the beauty, the dignity, the religious vigor and the social idealism of their faith . . . and to inculcate the feeling of comradeship in great spiritual adventures with Jews." With true understanding of the entire problem, he concludes: "We can recognize our differences, respect the unique values of both Judaism and Christianity and participate in our great common tasks."

Who can doubt the potency, the efficacy, the ultimate effectiveness of the good will movement when it calls forth such prophetic spirits as Everett Clinchy, and when such articles find their way into a liberal Christian magazine read by thousands of Christian preachers and laymen. Tremendous forces are at play in Christendom; one wonders whether Judaism, religion of universalistic prophets and humanity loving sages can boast of the same liberality of spirit. If the good will movement will achieve no good, as so many skeptics despairingly aver, we Jews, methinks will be in large measure to blame. We must respond to such utter sincerity as Clinchy, and not a few others, has evidenced, and evince the same breadth of vision, understanding of mind, and all-embracing love of heart and soul.
